

The three stone engagement ring carries symbolic meaning that resonates with many couples independently of its visual appeal. Representing the past, present, and future of a relationship, the three stone configuration has become one of the most popular engagement ring styles alongside the solitaire and the halo. At dimend SCAASI on Chicago's Jewelers Row, the three stone selection and design capability covers the full range of approaches to this meaningful style. The classic three stone configuration places a larger center diamond flanked by two smaller stones of equal size. The proportions of the side stones relative to the center stone affect the visual balance of the ring significantly. Side stones at approximately half the carat Chicago engagement rings weight of the center stone create a balanced composition. Larger side stones create a grander, more elaborate piece. Stone shape combinations in three stone rings offer interesting design possibilities. Three matched round brilliant stones is the classic approach. A center cushion with tapered baguette side stones references vintage design. A center oval flanked by pear-shaped side stones pointing outward is a distinctive contemporary interpretation.

Mixed diamond types are an option in three stone rings for buyers who want to manage budget while maximizing the visual impact of the center stone. A mined diamond center with lab grown side stones, or a lab grown center with smaller mined accent side stones, are configurations that dimend SCAASI can execute in custom settings. Colored stone variations are particularly effective in three stone configurations. A colored center stone flanked by white diamond side stones creates a compelling visual contrast. A white center with colored side stones offers a subtler version of the same idea. The dimend SCAASI team can help Chicago couples design three stone rings that express their specific aesthetic preferences and budget priorities. Call +1 312-857-1700 to schedule your consultation.
