

Research consistently shows that remote workers perform better when they have a dedicated workspace that is physically separate from the living areas of the home. Outdoor Building Group's garden rooms are designed with this insight in mind, providing Glasgow's growing remote workforce with a proper office environment just steps from the back door. The company has seen a significant increase in enquiries from Glasgow professionals since hybrid and remote working became mainstream. Employees at Glasgow-based firms, as well as those working remotely for companies elsewhere in the UK, are investing in garden rooms as a long-term infrastructure for home-based careers. The productivity benefits extend beyond simple separation from domestic noise. An OBG garden room creates a commute ritual, however short, that helps the brain transition into and out of work mode. Customers regularly report that owning a garden office has improved both their work output and their ability to switch off at the end of the day.
